The History of Scio

Scio Memorial Library

Monday, October 27th

7 p.m.

Will the myth that Scio got its name from its designation as Section 10 on the railroad be debunked? Why was the new Worthington plant, the company that eventually became Turbodyne and Dresser Rand, built in Wellsville and not Scio? Who invented the dry cell battery? Which has caused more devastation over the years, fire or flood? These questions will be debated and possibly answered at a presentation to be held at the Scio Memorial Library on Monday, October 27th, beginning at 7 p.m.

Craig Braack, County Historian, with assistance from Cork Lounsberry of the library board and Town Historian Marlea Robbins, will present the program, and input from the audience will be welcomed.

Anyone interested in Scio's history from the first settlers, who they were, what they did, and what has happened since is urged to attend. Anyone with photographs and family heirlooms to share would add to the event. Refreshments will be served.
